DEEP, FERVENT CONCERN OF ISRAELI LEADERS IS FOR WORLD RECOGNITION OF ESSENTIAL QUESTION POSED BY EICHMANN TRIAL: HOW COULD SUCH HOLOCAUST HAPPEN? THIS IS FOR ALL HUMANITY TO PONDER. WILL IT BE HEARD BY THE WORLD?

The two overriding reasons behind the Jerusalem trial of Adolf Eichmann for the murder of six million Jews, Israelis say, are:

First, to educate Israeli youth on the facts of the holocaust, as the Nazi extermination program is called here, and to impress this upon the young folks' memories so they will never forget it.

Incredibly enough, young Israelis not only don't understand why 6,000,000 Jews were killed in the terror of World War II, but they seem almost incapable of absorbing the facts of that reality, says Robert S. Bird, of the New York Herald Tribune. And this is because they have been brought up in a patriotic, nationalistic, fighting and working tradition. This has made them conspicuously self-reliant and free-spirited.

Second, the hope of the government is that the Eichmann trial will alert the world — vividly, arrestingly, and feelingly — to this profound question: How could it happen in the twentieth century civilization that a Nazi gang of criminals could seduce and gain the support of its full nation while these criminals set about exterminating an entire people?

Among Israelis of influence, Eichmann, the individual, is regarded as almost a triviality in the historical picture. Even the average person on the street speaks about him with a mixture of contempt and indifference. His fate, whether to hang him or not, is discussed without emotion and often with wit.

But the older generation of Israelis are eager to talk over among themselves and with visiting correspondents the larger question of world responsibility with wistfulness and worry. They would not for the world want Attorney General Gideon Hausner, a most humane, feeling man himself, to depart from the dignity which already marks this trial.

This is so even though these people realize that the lesson they wish to get across to the world may be lost to the world — because of the lack of court-room drama which may characterize the trial.

The deep and even fervent concern of responsible Israeli leaders for world recognition of the essential question posed by this trial was brought home to me on listening to one of the topmost officials of the country, says the New York Herald Tribune. He was, of course, speaking privately.

"I used to listen to Hitler before the war," he said, "and I was filled with wonder at the things he said, those utterly crazy things he was telling the German people. I would hear him in that fanatic voice tell them that they need not be moral people — that rather they should be immoral people, and that they should do immoral things to other people, to us, the Jews. I couldn't believe what I heard, but all the world was listening, too.

'Then all these things he said he would do — and much worse, too — came true, and our people came close to being exterminated. And the whole world was listening and hearing and watching.

"Now this trial serves no purpose, except to help keep the history books straight, if it does not evoke among the peoples of the world a question. This is the question:

"How could such a thing have come to happen? This is a question for all humanity, not just for the Jews. Do you think that this question will be heard and pondered by the world?"

Still, this official indicated that even at the risk of losing that vivid impression on the world which the trial might make through an injection of the [illegible] mirror into the proceedings, he would not want such sensationalism.

In the home of a cultured family in Jerusalem I discussed the problem with a young Israeli and his father. We were sitting in a room which was filled with bookcases of volumes printed in several languages. The young man obviously was well informed on the facts of the Nazi era, says the New York Herald Tribune. But he said:

"Most of my friends are quite ignorant of what happened during those years, in a way they don't particularly want to hear about it. I was born here — I am a Sabra — and my generation grew up here knowing that we should always be ready to resist aggression against our country and should be ready to fight and die for it. We feel that the highest value is to be found in working on our country's land.

"It is true that there are more than 300,000 survivors from the prison camps living here in Israel, but they almost never talk about that period of their lives. It is a closed chapter for them, and my friends hardly know anything about it.

"Now they are curious, and they feel a little shamed to know that our people did nothing to resist during the war. Why did Jews stay on in Germany so long after the persecution started?"

"Yes, we all ask that — why didn't we realize what was happening around us?" interposed a motherly-looking guest. "But I will tell you it was hard to believe. The Jews of Germany loved Germany, not Nazi Germany, but the cities and the countryside and all the wonderful things of German life. They felt it was their Germany, too."

The boy shook his head in a gesture of youthful cynicism. "The influences that caused the holocaust are still in the world, and there's nothing to do but resist and fight them," he said, reports the New York Herald Tribune.

"There is no good in trying to hide the fact that anti-Semitism [illegible] to play make-believe about it. Bring it out in the open and fight it."

"You think the Eichmann trial a good idea?" I asked the young man. "I am all for it, especially for the information it will give my generation." "What would you do about Eichmann if he is convicted?" "I'd hang him. But I know my father would not agree."

The father, who was listening, said, "No, I would not hang him. What does he matter? But I do wish the world would think about what the system of which he was a part did to our people."

And so the discussion continued along these lines for hours, just as similar discussions probably were going on in homes all over Israel.

A judge of the Eichmann tribunal finally asked a question burning in the minds of many court-room spectators.

Did any of the Jews who were dickering with Adolf Eichmann in an effort to end the wholesale gas chamber slaughter ever think about assassinating him?

Judge Benjamin Halevi put the question to two witnesses who were active in rescue efforts in Budapest in the summer of 1944 when Eichmann was cranking up the extermination machinery of Auschwitz-Birkenau and at the same time dangling bribery bids before the Jewish leaders in a pretense of calling off the slaughter.

One of the witnesses, a man, said "No," and let it go at that.

The other witness, a woman, said "Yes," and told why they didn't go ahead with the temptation, says the New York Herald Tribune.

She was Mrs. Hansi Brand, who had more than a dozen meetings with Eichmann in Budapest in efforts to persuade him to hold off his deportations to the gas chambers.

At the time she was being held as a hostage for the return of her husband, Joel Brand, who had gone to Istanbul to relay to Allied governments the German offer to [illegible] for 10,000 trucks.

Mrs. Brand, a plump housewife who failed to break under Hungarian torture in 1944, was testifying for the second day when Judge Halevi asked his question. He had established that virtually all Jews in Budapest knew by this time that Eichmann was shipping Jews in an ever-growing stream to the Auschwitz death camp. The judge asked:

"Did the committee (Jewish Rescue Committee of Budapest) ever discuss a possibility of liquidating Eichmann?" Eichmann tightened his face a bit on that.

"Yes," Mrs. Brand answered, "but we had reports from other countries about what happened to partisans and others who tried or conspired against Germans. I don't wish to praise myself or the committee, but more than once we gave it thought — what would be likely to happen if we entered unguarded into Eichmann's office, and one of us shot him down.

"But what would we have achieved? I wish to say frankly and sincerely that we were a committee for aid and rescue, we were not heroes."

Judge Halevi, who never spares a witness in asking his gently framed but powerfully searching questions, gazed mildly at the woman through his tortoise shell spectacles, as if encouraging her to continue.

"I might add," Mrs. Brand said, shifting in her chair a little, "that we always had foremost in our minds the anxiety to keep people alive. If this Eichmann were to be killed, we did not know that his death would bring help to our people."

The judge pressed on, saying he wanted to make his intention clear and did not suggest that Mrs. Brand herself lacked courage, or the others, says the New York Herald Tribune. "You proved that when you withstood all those tortures," he said. "I can well imagine that it had seemed to you a wise decision you would have done so — it was a question of judgment."

"This I want to say," the witness answered. "We did not know the Nazi hierarchy. Maybe some one else would take his place and the mills would continue to work, maybe at an increased pace. We had no idea how the Nazi machine worked. We didn't know what went on behind the scenes.

"We saw it happen in Czechoslovakia after the uprising of the partisans there. Not only those caught were killed, but the whole camp was immediately sent to Auschwitz."

The witness who said that he had never heard of Eichmann's assassination being proposed, was Moshe Rosenberg, who was an engineer in Budapest and was active in rescue work. Though he would not discuss the assassination matter further when judge asked him the question, he did give a vivid description of why thousands of Hungarians failed to save their own lives.

The thing that helped to kill the Jews of Hungary, he explained to the tribunal, was lack of time when Eichmann put the speed-up on at the Auschwitz murder facility. Even two weeks or a month more time would have helped, he said.

"I had a brother with six children in a provincial town," said the witness, a dignified, gray-haired man in a well-tailored business suit. "I sent a Gentile to him with a lot of money and a special letter and the necessary papers and asked him and his family to leave their place and come to Budapest. I never got a reply."

He testified that the letter reached the brother all right, and in the end one child was saved, says the New York Herald Tribune. But he continued:

"Perhaps I am naive in thinking that he and the other provincial Jews would follow the advice to leave and come to Budapest. For my brother to do this would mean that he would have to shave off his beard, cut off his side curls, take forged papers, wear the clothes of a Goy (Gentile), and believe that God had abandoned his little village.

"When I though he could do this overnight I was naive. If there had been a span of a fortnight or a month between the letter and the deportations he might have been saved."

Then, looking at Eichmann, who [illegible] his trademark of boredom, he added: "That murderer robbed us of the element of time — and that's why he succeeded."

Several times in the trial the prosecution has depicted Eichmann as outdoing Hitler himself in his zeal to exterminate Jews. Solicitor General Gavriel Bach put a batch of documents in evidence to prove this again.

One was a letter from Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop to the German Ambassador in Budapest, Edmund Veesenmayer, which said that Hitler was furious regarding Hungary's reluctance under the Regent, Admiral Horthy, to allow the wholesale deportation of Jews, and was protesting the laxness. Hitler threatened to bring utter disaster on Hungary if the deportations were not speeded up, Ribbentrop reported.

He went on to say that Hitler insist that the Hungarian regent ought not to let the Jewish and American threats frighten him and that Germany would stand victorious after the war, and Hungary had better be careful.

Meanwhile, Eichmann was pictured by Veesenmayer in a letter to Ribbentrop as demanding for transport all the Jews of Hungary, and was proposing that they should be rounded up in a surprise operation which would move like a flash of lightning.

But the forces of conflict were at work in Hungary at this particular time, the documents revealed, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Horthy government was shaky, and Heinrich Himmler's deal to exchange Jews for army trucks was still being kicked around. Himmler ordered the Hungarian deportations to be stopped.

In a document dated 1944, Kurt Becher, Himmler's deputy, was reporting on negotiations he was having with the Jewish leader, Dr. Rudolf Kastner, afterwards assassinated in Israel.

Becher cabled Himmler that the second party, meaning the Jewish leaders, were ready to carry out the transaction but that as matters now stood the transaction would make the American position look rather naked.

In order to clothe this naked position, Becher proposed to Himmler that instead of dickering for army trucks the Nazis ask the Jews for chromium, machine tools, and other vital supplies which the neutral nations formerly supplied Germany, Himmler said to Becher, go ahead.

Then the Hungarian regime cracked down on the deportations, and Eichmann engineered an ingenious bluff. Kastner report, showed that Eichmann threatened to close up his operation entirely. He went to a farm in the provinces, waiting for the Salasey government to assume power in Hungary.

Mr. Brand's secret mission story stood up well under a most searching examination by the judges. But the actual Jews-for-trucks transaction remained a nebulous affair. From Judge Halevi's questions it appeared that he placed little faith in the sincerity of the German offer, though he did not doubt the sincerity of Mr. Brand.

As the trial record now stands, there unquestionably was some kind of an offer being put out by the Germans, and Eichmann was in on it, says the New York Herald Tribune. But whether this was based on a genuine hope on the part of the Germans actually to obtain war materials in exchange for Jewish lives remains blurred.

There is evidence in the record that it may have been some kind of a come-on for a feeler being put out by Himmler to make a peace with the Allies on conditional terms.

Most of the closing address of Dr. Servatius, counsel for Eichmann was a meticulous legal analysis of the evidence, but the conclusion was eloquent and moving in tone. Eichmann looked as if he was using much restraint to maintain his mask of prisoner dignity.

"This trial," Dr. Servatius said, "should have as its objective not revenge on the accused for the deeds committed by the political leadership. The conviction of the accused cannot determine what happened and serve as a warning for history.

"The idea of superannuation found its expression in the earliest history of the Jewish nation, when the concept of the fallow year was formed. It is a religious concept, that superannuation and the passing of time brings peace and blessings. We are not requesting forgiveness and forgetfulness here, but rather thought and truth.

"The passing of time must bring peace and an end to suffering. A distance must be created between the individual human being and the boundless collective. A return must be made to self-restraint and humanity.

"Let there be a judgment given here which will show the nations of the world the wisdom of the Jewish people. Let there be recognition here of the principle of superannuation which applied in Argentina, and this will correct the flaw of abduction. This, too, would serve peace.

"I propose to this court that the proceedings against the accused be stopped and his file closed, and that he be judged no more."

Judge Landau thanked the German lawyer, says the New York Herald Tribune, and after a few small legal questions were disposed of announced:

"The remainder of the trial is now postponed until the judgment is to be given. As we see the situation now, the judgment will not be given in any event before November of this year. You will receive notification at least two weeks ahead of time."

The big, imposing Dr. Servatius dwelt at much length on the central question of the defense — that Eichmann acted under orders that he could not disobey. And in this connection, Dr. Servatius placed the blame for the orders on the Nazi leadership.

DEEP, FERVENT CONCERN OF ISRAELI LEADERS

The Eichmann lawyer, a gentleman despite his burly figure, was almost shockingly cynical in some of his remarks. In speaking of Count 5 of the indictment, he said that murder, enslavement, extermination and other acts charged against Eichmann as crimes against humanity were, indeed, crimes against humanity.

But the jurist must hesitate, he argued, because that which happened is not measured by the hearts of human beings, but by the brain, and one has to consider political reasons.

The heads of state resorted to these actions, he emphasized. They did this before, and they are likely to repeat them.

"I am afraid," interjected Judge Landau, "you are pessimistic so far as the last words of your statement are concerned."

"I hope that you are right, your honor," Dr. Servatius replied thoughtfully.

But he pointed out that even though "Thou shalt not kill" is one of the Ten Commandments, one reads in the Pentateuch what the political leader did — that is, Moses.

They did kill, Dr. Servatius argued. And the recipient of orders cannot recognize as criminal acts the deeds of the political leadership, because he is not a member of that leadership.

Then, going to the question of Jewish persecutions, says the New York Herald Tribune, he argued that Eichmann had to cope with the cool calculations of the politicians even on the other side of the boundaries.

"One can only follow the diplomatic chess game of that period," Dr. Servatius said. "But one cannot understand it. The persecution of Jews, it is said, is unparalleled and unprecedented in the history of mankind. But actually one should think about this a little more.

"Persecutions have cost sacrifices in many other periods as well. It appears that in ages past the sacrifices and the number of victims were not any less horrible. And modern history also shows incidents of vast extent.

"For instance, the murder of people after the discovery of North and South America, the murder of Indians, Mexicans, Peruvians, slave trading in Africa, the extermination of the aborigines in Australia, the persecution of Jews in Spain and the extermination of the Huguenots in France."

He argued that states require obedience, and they secure it through oaths. He said the state of Israel had to take harsh measures when it fought for its very existence. These are the virtues on which alone a state can build its foundations, he asserted.

Whether these virtues are rewarded, this depends on whether politics is successful, then the order appears to the victor as a crime. Then the man who was obedient is unfortunate, and he has to pay the price for his loyalty.

On the question of obeying orders, Judge Landau asked Dr. Servatius to show whether Eichmann revolted internally, rose up internally, against extermination. The lawyer said that the record was replete with examples. But the judge seemed doubtful.

As to the real reasons for the persecutions of the Jews, the lawyer said that the answers are simply not available, and philosophers, theologians and historians must attack the problem.

He asserted that in this trial two systems of law faced each other: One, the German system which holds that the perpetrator is only that man who willed the act as his own and that an accomplice is a man who wishes to support the acts of another, says the New York Herald Tribune. The other system, he said, was the Israeli system, which to the Anglo-American concept that obscures the element of will.

Under the Israeli system, he said, the accused can be found guilty as a perpetrator, though his minor participation can be taken into account.

Dr. Servatius said that in this case the peculiar thing was that Eichmann was in the middle. He neither ordered the exterminations nor carried them out. He dwelt on the inseparability of acts, and questioned the idea of the existence of a conspiracy.

Can there be a conspiracy between a man and his superior, where there are no mutual deliberations? he asked.

He also spoke about the limited means of proof which were at the disposal of the defense.

Experts who could have supported him did not want to have any dealings with the defense, he said. The daily fanfares of the press and the trumpets of the publications made them shy. They sealed off their ears. The press campaign against the accused constituted contempt of court in the greatest possible extent. The defense found it very difficult to act in the face of such reality.

As to Eichmann's testimony, he said that it was sincere and given with a ring of truth, and should be believed. One cannot regard the life of the accused through a judicial keyhole, he said.

Dr. Servatius began his summation with the charge that the "great paladins" of the Nazi regime all tried to put the blame for the Jewish mass murders on Eichmann, as if they were innocent.

Then he began analysing each count of the indictment, one at a time. He began with those relating to membership in criminal organizations, the Gestapo and the security police.

Holding that the prosecution had failed to prove the criminality of these organizations, he said that to punish members of the collective membership without proving guilt would be comparable to Hitler's action in dealing with the Jews as if they were members of a criminal group, though without any law to back him.

On counts dealing with crimes against the Poles, Slovenes, and gypsies, says the New York Herald Tribune, he held that since Israel was not even created at the time of these crimes against other peoples, much less in a state of war with Nazi Germany at the time, it now lacked jurisdiction under international law.

In arguing against the count linking Eichmann with the extermination of the children of Lidice, he asserted that proof of this link was not given and the final fate of the children was not cleared up.

He called the mass deportations of the Poles a grand resettlement venture connected with labor purposes and so not a crime. In saying that Israel itself had had experience in resettlement projects, he made one of a series of touchy references to country.

The defense attorney charged that the war-crimes counts were illegal because Israel was not belligerent during the war and was not in a legal position to prosecute these accusations now.

AN INVITATION TO JEWISH FAMILIES

The rapid growth of Belcourt's Westpark community is one of the outstanding achievements in building circles in recent years. We attribute this, first, to the extremely good values being offered in well-designed, well-built homes and, second, to the intrinsic merits and conveniences of this green-belt residential areas.

These advantages are, naturally, of interest to many Jewish prospective home-owners. In reply to a number of enquiries, we are happy to state that a Jewish community already exists in nucleus. Several families are now in residence, with more to follow in the near future. Suitable land is available for a synagogue, and full cooperation will be accorded the representatives of a new congregation. In other words, Westpark is past the "pioneer" stage.

We invite you to drive out to Belcourt's Westpark. Look around at the homes and the neighbourhood. If you like what you see, we can arrange for you to meet with other like-minded families. Please telephone Irving Zunenshine or Ron Weiner at 735-1648 for further information.

DIRECTIONS:

WESTPARK is adjacent to Rockcliffe, off Senneville Road, (St. Remi Road). 1 mile south of Sauvé Boulevard, 2 miles south of the old Metropolitan Boulevard. Watch for Belcourt signs at intersections.

It replaces the 348 cu. in. engine except for use in heavy trucks. Its performance equals the 348, but fuel economy and engine operating efficiency are both improved.

Heaters and built-in front seat belt anchors are standard equipment on all 1962 Chevrolet cars. A limited slip differential and air conditioning are also available throughout the line of 32 passenger car models. Adding to its fresh styling appearance, Corvair has new twin ornamental grilles in front plus restyled emblems, tail lights and engine exhaust grille. The Corvair 500 station wagon will be replaced by a luxurious Monza station wagon with optional bucket seats.

A lighter weight Powerglide unit with aluminum case is used for the automatic transmission option.

The Corvette for 1962 retains much of its popular sports car identification. Pleasing exterior refinements include a windsplit around the cove replacing bright metal molding. Grille configuration replaces three horizontal bars in the cove. The front grille is finished in black.

Cockpit of the Corvette is offered in four upholstery colors white black, light beige, red, white, silver, maroon and medium beige are the seven solid exterior colors available.

As for the plunder of Jewish property, he objected to this charge because it was framed in the indictment as a crime against humanity, and he argued that because it did not involve attack on persons it was not a crime of that class.

Moreover, he said, it was not Eichmann, but the state, that did the plundering, and that this was a common practice of states at war in this century. He insisted that Eichmann never personally benefited from the robberies.

Dr. Servatius analyzed the evidence relating to the sterilization charges and concluded that Eichmann had nothing to do with this. On another count — one of the unique charges in the indictment — he sought to have Eichmann absolved for inflicting bodily and spiritual harm on the Jewish people, as considered separately from the physical extermination charges. Here he contended that it was the German citizenship laws that caused large numbers of Jews to be earmarked for concentration and transport, and not Eichmann.

As to the accusation that Eichmann sat in Berlin giving orders that brought about the extermination of the Jews, says the New York Herald Tribune, the defense attorney said that Eichmann's office rather was concerned with emigration of the Jews, at least until toward the end.

The Hungarian phase of the case, which had occupied a great deal of time by the prosecution, Dr. Servatius swept away with brief mention. He depicted Eichmann as a subordinate and said the Hungarian deportations to the death camps were carried out by the Hungarian gendarmerie and the Arrow Cross party, the Hungarian Fascist party.

"The decisive figures in Hungary were anti-Semites of the first order," he said. And he added that in Hungary "the personality of the accused was brought to the fore only after the war by those who had been really responsible and wanted to exonerate themselves."

Dr. Servatius pointed out, as Eichmann had several times earlier, that "the real position of the accused was shown from the very simple fact that after 1941 he was never promoted."

Dr. Servatius added: "The accused did not have such a position which could have elevated him into the circle of leadership. It was proved that as head of department IVB4 he never signed papers in any other way than I.A. (meaning in assignment). His executive power was confined. He was independent only in routine work.

"But here the prosecution tried to elevate the rank of the accused beyond the normal one. It did not succeed, however, in using circumstantial evidence to convert the accused into a key figure in the extermination."

Hungary was the last of the European countries to be dealt with during the trial and it is the most important for two reasons.

One is because of the magnitude of exterminations of Hungarian Jews. More than 1,000,000 of them are estimated to have been murdered by the Nazis by gas, bullet, or through starvation and brutality.

The other reason is that Hungary was the only European country where Eichmann was on the scene as his own field commander. He had his headquarters and home in Budapest while he rounded up his victims and shipped them off to the gas chambers in 1944.

THE LABOR MOVEMENT IN ISRAEL

There are several explanations but the most important one is psychological. The Negro feels that the Jew, like himself, has met with intolerance from the Western nations not for what he is as a human being but because of his racial heritage.

Colonel Nasser, of course, is worried that democratic Israel should be of much importance to the African Nations. Ghana, Guinea, and Mali recently denounced Israel as imperialistic. They have done this to please Nasser. It is absurd to call Israel "imperialistic". It is too small and, above all, too democratic to be imperialistic. At present, no nation, not even ours, is practically more useful to these African nations than Israel. So this denunciation from three African nations that Israel is "imperialistic" will not induce them to break their ties with Israel. They go on sending their students to the Afro-Asian Institute. They invite Israeli medical teams to improve their health provisions, and engineers to do construction work for them, roads, factories, and such important structures as the new Parliament building in Sierra Leone.

Israel is today one of the strongest links between the white Western nations and the chaotic African situation. As Histadrut is the motive force in most of the cooperative endeavors between Israel and the Afro-Asian nations, your National Committee for Labor Israel has the greatest possible opportunity by serving Histadrut to serve not only Israel but our own nation and the peace of the world. That is why I am so happy to address you.

The Labor Movement In Israel

Address by Agnes E. Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post and Times Herald, at the national roll call conference of the National Committee For Labor Israel, in New York.

My visit to Israel was such a transforming experience that I have tried hard to define its influence. I summed it up at a little farewell dinner given me by Mr. Lavon, Secretary General of Histadrut, by saying that this great little country had deepened my social consciousness. For this I am profoundly grateful. I agree with Montaigne who said, "To none should we be more thankful than to those who in inhuman times like ours can strengthen the human in us, who urge us not to sacrifice our one irredeemable possession, our inner self. For only the man who himself remains free against all and every thing, can increase and maintain freedom on earth".

Because Israel has achieved the miracle of maintaining freedom against heavy odds, enduring a long-drawn out war of independence, incredible hardships and poverty, and the constant threat by far more powerful enemy countries that they will destroy it, the survival of Israel in freedom is the most encouraging phenomenon in modern history. It stands before the world as proof that democratic ideals genuinely lived are invincible even when menaced on every side by totalitarianism. The equanimity with which the Israelis accept their dangerous and difficult situation was a lesson to me that we Americans, who are far more numerous, prosperous and powerful, should learn to bear with equal self-confidence the staggering problems which President Kennedy described in his first message to Congress in their harsh enormity. Because Israel is an example of the world of calm democratic fortitude, under great stress, for this alone it deserves all the help we Americans can give it.

You who are members of the National Committee for Labor Israel know far better than most Americans how great a contribution Histadrut has made to the creation of Israel as an independent state, to its political, economic, and social progress, and to the character of its people which is the real source of the nation's stability and self-confidence. In America we are familiar with the United Jewish Appeal, with Hadassah, but the American public is not familiar enough with the importance of your organization. For your value to Histadrut is in proportion to Histadrut's value to Israel. Concerning the value of this to Israel, Golda Meir said to me: "Without Histadrut the State of Israel would not have come into existence. It did the work of the State before the State existed." And the Minister of Finance, Mr. Levi Eshkol, said, "It is the backbone of the State."

Perhaps you would like to know how I happened to make this study of Histadrut. My friend, Leo Perlis, Director of the Community Services Department of the AFL-CIO, sold me the idea. He thought that Americans should know more about Histadrut and the remarkable contributions it has made to the creation of the State of Israel. My curiosity was aroused and I agreed to go. Thereupon, Mr. Perlis introduced me to Mr. Izaiah Avroch who is Histadrut's representative in our country, and I received an invitation from him to visit Israel as the guest of his unique labor movement.

Many friends warned me that the Israelis are so enthusiastic about their country that they work you morning, noon, and night. They did, and I throve on it, partly because of the dry, cool, sunny climate. After interviews in Tel Aviv with Mr. Pinhas Lavon, Secretary General of Histadrut; Mr. Aaron Becker, Director of the Department of Trade Unions; my secretary, Frances Landry, and I were given a car, an excellent guide and a good driver, plus a carefully composed daily schedule that revealed every aspect of Histadrut's activities, past, present, and future. I never worked so hard in my life and I never enjoyed anything more. Every moment was exciting, instructive, and incredibly beautiful since the landscape changes not just from day to day, but from hour to hour.

Although the General Federation of Jewish Labor in Israel, to give it its title in translation, is one of the most complex and interesting labor federations in the world, very little material on this organization is available in English. As a result it has received support from non-Jewish sources in our country only from our own labor union organization, the AFL-CIO.

And yet Histadrut now needs help as never before. For its pioneer work is but half completed and only Histadrut has the experience and the leadership to complete what Ben Gurion said to me was Israel's main task, the reclamation of the desert. I do not wish to convey the idea that state activities are not also essential to this prime objective. But Histadrut has the chief responsibility of maintaining the pioneering spirit without which the hardships of founding new border agricultural communities, of living in remote desert settlements such as Dimona and Eilat, cannot be endured. As Mr. Avrech, speaking to the American Labor Zionists last October, puts it: "We face in Israel the problem of instilling pioneering values and transmitting the pioneering heritage from one generation to the next." This I found to be Israel's main struggle now that a little more prosperity can be found throughout the nation and especially in comfortable modern cities like Tel Aviv.

During my last interview with Mr. Lavon, I discovered that Histadrut is making valiant and successful efforts to reach the younger generation and rekindle in them the desire for participation in the building of an even stronger Israel.

"This is a decisive problem, both in Histadrut and the State," he said very seriously. "The older generation is the result of unique circumstances, a special phase of Jewish history, when young people with good minds and a great will to be of service gave us the type of workers we have developed. They are conscious of their personal value and do not feel themselves inferior to the highest power of the land. But we are concerned as to what will happen after we are gone. The question is whether we older people shall be able in the years that Providence leaves us, to build up a group of men and women which remains faithful to those spiritual forces that made us what we are and made Israel what it is. If these values become museum exhibits, then most of the uniqueness of Israel will be lost."

Mr. Lavon was encouraged by the fact that young people are leaving the government and joining Histadrut precisely because they wish to become participants in the heavy pioneering tasks which still confront Histadrut.

I saw in remote desert towns such as Dimona and Eilat, in the new city of Upper Nazareth, and in the industrial plants at the Dead Sea, how heavy the tasks of Histadrut are. Private industry is being encouraged by Histadrut but it cannot be expected to risk its capital in these frontier towns, until Histadrut has demonstrated, as it has in Beer Sheva, that the new settlements are sufficiently stable so that private investments can safely play their important part.

So now is the moment, my friends, to show your own faith in the vital role of Histadrut and in its importance to the state by redoubling your efforts to bring moral and financial support to this heroic labor union movement. There is no competition between Histadrut and the State of Israel. The independent State of Israel has more glamor for the Jews of the Diaspora than Histadrut. Yet the latter is still absolutely essential to its welfare and development. Nor is there any basis for talk about conflict between Histadrut and the State. As Golda Meir, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, put it, "This is our great good fortune, that despite disputes, there is always in the end complete cooperation between Histadrut and the State."

Therefore, my friends, your organization seems to me of unique importance to Israel. For by your support of its pioneering spirit you are strengthening the very sinews of Zion. You may wonder why I should care so deeply about the future of Histadrut and of Israel. The answer is two-fold: First, I have seen and felt and realized that Israel is of major importance to the United States and the whole free world because it is the only bastion of democracy in an area completely surrounded by authoritarian Arab countries. Fortunately, Colonel Nasser's United Arab Republic is not nearly so strong as he tries to pretend; none of these countries likes the other, and all have their misgivings about Nasser himself. Nevertheless, the UAR has the support of Communist Russia. Therefore, it seems to me a matter of self-interest that Israel should have not only the support of the Jews of America but of our Government and of our people as a whole.

But there is another vital reason why Israel has become especially important to the United States. Today when labor movements throughout the new independent Afro-Asian countries are facing the same problems of agricultural and industrial development, it is not strange that they have long been sending emissaries to Israel to find out how and why this country has progressed so quickly. As a result, Histadrut founded what is called the Afro-Asian Institute which now has 72 foreign students from 24 of these countries, all of whom have graduated from secondary schools or colleges in their own countries. They have seminars in French and in English, but spend three weeks doing actual work in an agricultural cooperative settlement and in the Department of Labor. In addition, the Medical School at Jerusalem has a graduate department for Afro-Asian doctors and the Hebrew University is training numerous undergraduates.

At the invitation of the Afro-Asian countries, Histadrut's Overseas Operation Department is now sending abroad teams of experts of various kinds to Burma, Turkey, Iran, Sierra Leone, Ghana, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Nepal, and Mali. They constitute a great source of skilled democratic leadership which these countries greatly need. Ghana is in the process of founding a nation-wide system of agricultural cooperatives together with cooperative marketing on the Israeli model.

It will interest you that the Congo which has less qualified leadership than any other African country, has recently sent 37 carefully selected Congolese, including four members of Parliament, 17 civil servants, and leaders of youth organizations to Israel to be trained in the problems of administration and agricultural production. This is a natural development among African nations as the social and economic aspects of cooperation are closely related to their ancient tribal structure before the coming of white colonialism. The democratic organization of Histadrut with its centralized structure and local labor councils also has advantages for these newly emergent countries. For it makes possible coordinated policy and planning on a nation-wide scale while protecting the rights and freedom of the individual. The African leaders say to themselves, "If little Israel has accomplished so much so quickly, why can't we?"

Why have these Afro-Asian countries such confidence in Israel when their hatred for other white nations amounts to a frenzy?

A.J.C. Charges Interpol Helps Nazi Criminals To Escape

Nazi officials accused of crimes against Jews during the Hitler period have been helped to escape prosecution and find haven outside Germany by the refusal of the International Police Organization (Interpol) to cooperate in their capture and arrest, the American Jewish Congress has charged. This group released the text of a letter it had sent to J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, urging that U.S. representatives at the international police body's General Assembly seek a change in Interpol policy on the issue. When the Interpol Assembly opened in Copenhagen, Denmark, heading the American delegation was Arnold Sagalyn, director of Law Enforcement Coordination of the U.S. Treasury Department.

The letter, signed by Will Maslow, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, deplored as "unthinkable" the fact that Nazi officials have been "aided in their escape from justice" by the unwillingness of Interpol to remove the "gratuitous and needless restrictions" which it has placed upon itself in the apprehension of Nazi Criminals. Mr. Maslow explained that Interpol's attitude apparently stems from a resolution passed at the organization's General Assembly in Lisbon in 1951 calling for non-intervention "in questions of a political, religious, or racial character."

The American Jewish Congress leader said it was obvious that Interpol "cannot allow itself to be propelled into the domestic political controversies or the internal racial or religious conflicts of various national governments." But such examples are "vastly different from an offer of assistance in the apprehension of those persons responsible for the annihilation of European Jewry," he declared, adding: "These acts of mass murder can in no way be assimilated to acts amounting to political crimes. The destruction of the Jewish communities of Europe was an act of unparalleled racial persecution sufficiently gross and extensive in character to constitute a crime against all humanity."

In urging that Interpol differentiate between political crimes and acts of genocide such as perpetrated by the Nazis against the Jews, Mr. Maslow cited a State Department memorandum to the U.S. Supreme Court during the extradition proceedings brought against Andrija Artukovic, former Minister of the Interior in the puppet Croatian government established by Hitler. In the memorandum, the State Department expressed the view "that the offense of murder, even though committed solely or predominantly with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, or religious group, is none the less murder within the meaning of the Extradition Treaty here involved (U.S.-Serbian) and is not thereby rendered an offense of a 'political character' within the meaning of Art. VI of the above-mentioned treaty."

The American Jewish Congress letter also cited a provision in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights that the right to seek and enjoy asylum "may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from non-political crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations."

Mr. Maslow asked that the U.S. delegation to the Interpol meeting support an amendment to the 1951 Interpol resolution "to insure that its terms will not apply to the pursuit or apprehension of persons accused of acts made punishable by the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal or the Genocide Convention. "We earnestly hope," the American Jewish Congress letter stated, "that the Copenhagen Assembly will clarify its policies and will direct Interpol to make available its facilities and services in the world-wide search for Nazi and Fascist criminals that stand accused and untried for atrocious crimes against Jews and other minorities."
